

Zach Sperske, Leif Dreizler, Scott Bishop,
Andrew Cooney, Andrew Thomas

Undefined reference to teamName Vision Statement

Description

Our project is a mobile platform for internally generated video clips within a company. Topics range from tutorials on how to use a printer to what it's like to work in a different department. The clips can be created and posted by any employee and will have feedback and approval mechanisms in order to present the highest quality and most relevant content to users. Creation of tutorials will be streamlined and pre-made templates will be provided depending upon the nature of the tutorial. Each video will be subject to an approval process to give the company control over what is posted to the knowledge base. Videos can also be posted describing the particulars of a position for potential applicants. This would be far more informative than a description written by someone who most likely does not hold the position.

Advantages

- Companies will benefit from the collaborative nature of the app, the knowledge base will constantly grow and improve
- Job postings will be personal and descriptive
- Employees will easily solve common problems on their own
- Reduction of training costs
- Platform can be integrated into current training programs

Implementation Platforms

- Mobile - A mobile optimized HTML 5 website will serve as the main point of access for users, although a desktop friendly version will be built as well.
- Data Storage - We will leverage Workday's tenanted server architecture to store content and keep it secure
- Server - Likely to be Apache

Outcome

There are more potential use cases for this application which we haven't even begun to consider and we will never be able to anticipate all of them. Our goal is to create a flexible application that can be easily leveraged in many ways to create and deliver content within an enterprise.

We plan to create a quality product that Workday will be proud to integrate into their enterprise software offerings. Ideally, the application will come to replace the notion of an employee handbook and serve as the main content sharing platform within companies using Workday's products.